

Technical Architecture

A technical architecture for a job tracking system defines the structure and components of the system, including how they interact and function together. It outlines the technology stack, software components, and data flow needed to build and operate the job tracking system. This architecture provides a blueprint for designing and implementing the system, ensuring that it meets its functional requirements and performs effectively.